Oregon's Beach And Bottle Bills: The Inside Story

Synopsis

The two legislative Acts featured in this book have been termed “First in the Nation” and “Landmark Legislation of the 20th Century.” They’re called “The Oregon Story,” the cornerstones of forward-thinking laws in the United States, and yes, in the world.

Paul Hanneman was one of only several legislators to serve 26 consecutive years in the Oregon House of Representatives since statehood in 1859. He was the original author of the “Bottle Bill” and chair of an Interim Committee that brought this concept of recycling to Oregon. The final version of the “Oregon Beach Bill” was largely due to his work as chair of the House Interim Subcommittee on Highways, and the state’s first Forest Practices Act was enacted through his chairmanship of the House Natural Resources Committee. “Landmark Legislation” and “First In The Nation” are terms frequently used to describe these laws. Over the past 65 years, Hanneman served on more than 40 local, state and federal committees, boards and commissions. He was twice named by his peers as one of “the most effective” legislators in northwest Oregon. He was selected as “One of Five Outstanding Young Men of Oregon” in 1968. By trade or profession he has been a commercial artist, boatbuilder, Coast Guard licensed guide, and commercial fisherman. Paul and Sandy live in Tillamook County near Pacific City.

Rep Hanneman offers an illuminating view of the Bottle Bill. Long dominated by the McCall perspective, this book provides the view of the bill from the minority party and from a coastal angle. Things are never as black and white as they appear in the rear view mirror of history. I'm glad the bill survived, and I have a deeper appreciation of the interests of the minority.

Former Oregon Rep. Paul Hanneman provides great insight into the legislative process and how a well thought idea can become law. This book is a must read for anyone interested in Oregon politics and should be required reading for every candidate for public office.
